Tele-poem hotline offers Oregon listeners cool escape

April is National Poetry Month and those who want to hear some pithy poems won't have to go far. In fact, they are only a phone call away.

Every day for the entire month callers can listen to recordings from current Oregon Poet Laureate Anis Mojgani, and past Laureates Paulann Petersen, Kim Stafford, and Elizabeth Woody reciting their favorite poems.

For more information, read the OPB article or visit Mojgani's Instagram, and to hear some

Oregon Historical Society Digital Collections

The Oregon Historical Society is committed to providing broad access to our collections for teaching, learning, and research. Our websites, catalog records, finding aids, and digital images enhance scholarship and promote use of both digital and physical objects. A critical component of our mission is to “inspire curiosity about all the people, places, and events that have shaped Oregon,” and providing free and open access to our collections is key to executing that mission.

Salem Police Transparency Portal

Welcome to the Salem Police Department Transparency Portal. The page is one of several initiatives to increase trust and legitimacy with the community we serve. By openly sharing data, policies, reports, and other information that directly impacts the public, we strive to engage residents in knowledge-sharing, while demonstrating openness and accountability.

The transparency portal is an in-progress project, and as such, will have more information added as the platform develops. Please check back.

Science we can do together:

SciStarter is a globally acclaimed, online citizen science hub where more than 3,000 projects, searchable by location, topic, age level, etc, have been registered by individual project leaders or imported through partnerships with federal governments, NGOs, and universities. As a research affiliate of NCSU and ASU, and a popular citizen science portal, SciStarter hosts an active community of close to 100,000 registered citizen scientists and millions of additional site visitors. Hundreds of citizen science projects use SciStarter’s NSF-supported APIs to help citizen scientists earn credit for their participation in their SciStarter dashboard, across projects and platforms. These features enable SciStarter’s partners (libraries, schools, museums, Girl Scouts and more) to catalyze customized citizen science pathways and track and support the progress of their communities through SciStarter. SciStarter also supports researchers in managing projects, including best practices for engaging participant partners.

Learn more about citizen science and check out these Ten Principles of Citizen Science.

Science Near Me is a free resource to help you quickly find opportunities to engage in all types of science, technology, engineering, math, (STEM) events, projects, and programs near you, in person and online. Enter your search preferences and Science Near Me will scan our partners’ opportunities and present a list of options for you in seconds. Search by location, topic, audience, and more to find the experience that is right for you.

The Brain, Nostalgia and Pain

Nostalgia – generally defined as that wistful and sentimental longing for some positive past experience – turns out to be helpful in reducing physical pain. A current fMRI study shared in The Journal of Neuroscience (JNeurosci, March 2022) showed that both male and female participants had decreased brain activity in pain-related regions when looking at nostalgic photos of things like old cartoons, childhood toys and candy – compared to more modern images of these same items.

Although the reason for how nostalgia reduces the perception of physical pain is not yet clear, the study found that the thalamus plays a key role suggesting that there is some modulatory mechanism connected to creating nostalgia and reducing pain. The thalamus (Greek for inner chamber) transmits 98% of our sensory information (vision, taste, touch and balance) to the cerebral cortex. (Smell does not travel this route.) The thalamus also regulates consciousness, sleep, alertness and wakefulness.

Because nostalgia includes a feeling of connectedness, the greater the nostalgic feeling experienced by the participants, the greater reduction in their perception of pain. The researchers plan to use different age groups in future research and to look into the impact of more personal nostalgic cues rather than generic nostalgia. While not expected to be a blanket solution to pain, they do expect a much stronger pain-relieving effect if participants observe personal scenarios, according to one of the researchers. So, the next time you feel achiness and soreness in those joints, you might try skipping the pain reliever and looking at those old photos, movies, childhood toys and music posters.

Whole Foods Gets an Amazon Makeover

When Amazon bought Whole Foods in 2017, they made very few changes, but they have recently changed that policy and gone high tech at a test-store in Washington, D.C. The “Amazonification” of Whole Foods includes an option to shop by “scanning the QR code in your Amazon app” or scanning your hand at a kiosk that links your palm to your Amazon account. To pay, you scan your hand at the check out. Your receipt shows up in an email later. Considered a bit “Orwellian” by some, it is anticipated that this is the future of shopping.

dead”, because it is almost impossible to see people in the new districts of white marble. The city holds the Guinness Book of Records title for most white marble on Earth.

80% of the buildings are made of white marble and only white cars are allowed in the city. It was listed as the second most expensive city in the world overall by the 2020 Mercer Cost of Living Survey. Turkmenistan gained independence from the Soviet Union in 1991 and now is one of the richest countries in the world. Turkmenistan is to the north of Iran and east of the Caspian Sea.

Word to Know: Tittup

(TID-əp) verb

British, late 18th century

1. Move with jerky or exaggerated movements.

"The horse will tittup to his stall even after a long ride."

"Jim Carrey has tittuped his way through some of his most famous movie roles."

DID YOU KNOW? Oregon has eleven lighthouses.

There are 9 original lighthouses, and 2 privately built lighthouses. Some of them are still working to this day. They are all different, each serving a purpose for their location and terrain.
